Leaving a Legacy for the beef industry

For cattlemen and cattlemen, ranching is more than just an occupation. It's a promise to consumers, a commitment to the environment and an honorable way of life, where the values of honesty, integrity and hard work are part of the job description.

North Dakota Stockmen's Association members recognize the importance of preserving and enhancing this way of life for this and future generations.

That's why they established the North Dakota Stockmen's Foundation in 2008 – to provide unique opportunities in beef-related promotion, research, scholarship, leadership and building and to leave a legacy behind for their children and grandchildren. The Stockmen's Foundation is a 501(c)3 charitable organization, which means that contributions are tax-deductible for donors.

While only two years old, the Stockmen's Foundation has made contributions to the beef industry already:

- Six college students studying for beef industry careers have received a $500 scholarship from the Foundation. New for 2011: an additional $500 scholarship. Eligible students may apply as high school seniors all the way through their junior year in college.

- The Stockmen's Foundation helped bring relief to producers who were devastated by the relentless floods and blizzards of Winter/Spring 2009. Support from the National Cattlemen's Foundation and many private donors, as well as a partnership with Hands Across North Dakota, helped the Foundation provide more than $50,000 in direct aid to rebuild damaged infrastructure.
